Weſel, October 17. All the Troops in Garriſon here (except one Battalion of Vierſet, and about one Squadron of Horſe that are Priſoners) are marched hence to join Prince Soubiſe's Army; it is thought they will continue to keep the Field till ſuch Time as the Prince ſees what will be the Iſſue of Marſhal Broglio's Attempt on Brunſwick and Hanover.

Liege, October 20. The Regiment of Damas Cavalry, having greatly ſuffered by the Glanders and continual Fatigues, received Orders to return to France. They arrived here To day from Prince Soubiſe's Army, in very bad Order, and very weak.

Tongres, October 21. This Day the firſt Company of Mouſquetaires arrived here in their Way to Paris; though they have been very ſickly ſince they took the Field, five Men have only died in the Hoſpitals; but they have loſt a great Number of Horſes for Want of Forage.

Hamburgh, October 20. We have no Advices yet of the Ruſſians having raiſed the Siege of Colberg. In the mean While we learn, that their Fleet is retired from before that Place, and that ſeveral of their Ships have been obliged to take Shelter in the Daniſh Iſland of Bornholm, and in other Ports in the Baltick, having by Storms loſt moſt of their Maſts, &c. That General Romanzow was yet near Colberg, in order to cover the Reimbarkation of his heavy Artillery.

Since the Loſs of Schweidnitz nothing has paſſed in Sileſia between the Pruſſian and Auſtrian Armies; and according to our laſt Letters from Magdeburgh, the King of Pruſſia was on the 10th Inſtant at Strehlen, and General Laudohn at Freyberg.

The French evacuated Wolfenbuttel the 15th Inſtant.

Hague, October 23. Prince Ferdinand's Head Quarters were on the 19th at Ohr not far from Hamelen: The Hereditary Prince was marching againſt Prince Xavier, who had ſtopped at Gandersheim, in his Retreat from Wolfenbuttel, but had been obliged to abandon, as is ſaid, the greateſt Part of the Artillery he was convoying from that Town.

Letters from Magdebourg of the 17th Inſtant ſay, that his Pruſſian Majeſty was the 9th Inſtant incamped at Strehlen, and that he had poſted great Part of his Cavalry in the Plain of Canth before Breſlaw. And that General Laudohn had as yet made no Movement from his old Camp of Freyburg. The ſame Letters add, that there are Accounts of General Romanzow's being employed in embarking his Artillery, from whence it was hoped that the Siege of Colberg would ſoon be raiſed: And that Prince Henry had detached General Seydlitz with a ſmall Corps againſt the Army of the Empire, which had thereupon in great Haſte evacuated Halle, and retreated to Naumberg upon the Saal.
